

Building Capacity & Community in the Applied Social Sciences

Join us for an Interdisciplinary Faculty Panel and Breakout Discussions on:

What is Applied Social Science?

- Meet faculty from across PSU and OHSU who conduct research in the applied social sciences
- Discuss your definition of “applied social science” with PSU colleagues across disciplines
- Explore the challenges and limits of using social science methodologies to address social problems
- Strengthen capacity on campus to work across disciplines on applied social science
- Faculty Panelists include: Sam Sennott, Special Education GSE; Shirley Jackson, Black Studies; Ho'esta Mo'e'hahne, Indigenous Nations Studies; Ellen Skinner, Psychology; Tanya Sydorenko, Applied Linguistics.

Thursday, October 25th 3:30-5:00pm
Smith Student Union 238

Envisioning an Applied Social Science Methodology Collective: An interdisciplinary collective whose mission is to provide a place for training, research, exchange and dissemination of research methodologies. It aims to expand the breadth and depth of methodological training available to PSU graduate students, faculty and community members across a range of epistemologies, and with a particular focus in the applied social sciences. Our interdisciplinary collective encompasses a full range of empirical social science methodologists. Students and faculty can gain assistance with and develop capabilities in the methodologies, analytic approaches and tools to support of their research, both in and outside of their discipline.

Sponsored by the Interdisciplinary Cooperative in Applied Social Science (I-CASS)
I-CASS is coordinated by faculty from CLAS, CUPA, GSE, SPH and SSW and receives support from their respective Deans
